

I cannot imagine why the FCC wishes to reduce the protection I have with Indiana's Telephone Privacy Law.

The present telephone privacy law in Indiana is excellent.

My telephone use is paid by me, not by the telemarketers. I resent having them interrupt my day with no concern for my time and only concern for them to make a sale.

If I wanted the telemarketers products, I have the intelligence to purchase them without the prodding of telemarketers.

At one time I could receive as many as six telemarketing calls per day; now I receive none under Indiana's law.

My mother lives in a nursing home in Indiana. Before I had her number added to the list maintained by Indiana's privacy law, she received many telemarketers call each day. Can you imagine what it is like to be bedridden, blind, and hard of hearing, only to have your rest interrupted by someone who doesn't know you, doesn't care about what is important to you, only to line his/her own pockets with thirty pieces of silver?

Please do nothing to interfere with Indiana's Telephone Privacy law. It serves all of us very well. Do not reduce our peace of mind.

Thank you.

Gladys Boring